A Carmen from Barcelona

Our Carmen wants to be the chronicle of a homicide, of the violent murder of a woman.

Stolen from the imagery of Luís Buñuel, the mise-en-scène is nourished by the sour sherry of the tablaos of the Ramblas and the fragrance of oranges and the sea that has the bitter aftertaste of absinthe in the brothels of Barcelona.

Barcelona in the 1960s was a port of contraband and slaves of a secular misery that was even more intense during the dictatorship of General Franco. According to the dictator's regime, they celebrated twenty-five years of peace under a totalitarian state that lasted until his death.

Greedy, intelligent and free Carmen pays the highest price, like a perfumed Virgin.

ORIGINAL ARGUMENT SYNOPSIS

Carmen takes place in Seville.

The story revolves around Carmen, a beautiful and seductive gypsy who works in a tobacco factory.

Carmen captivates all the men around her, including the soldier Don José, who falls madly in love with her and abandons his fiancée, Micaela.

Dancaire and Remendado are two smugglers and friends of Carmen. They plan their illegal activities and recruit Don José to join their gang.

The relationship between Carmen and Don José becomes more and more complicated.

While Carmen wants to experience love with Escamillo, Don José falls into despair and jealousy. Frasquita and Mercedes, Carmen's close friends, worry about her safety and try to warn her about the consequences of her actions. However, Carmen is faithful to her desire to live freely and follow her own path.

Throughout the opera, Micaela tries to rescue Don José from Carmen's charms and bring him back to his former life. Don José, tormented by jealousy, obsession and his inability to control Carmen, he is eventually consumed by anger and despair.

In a moment of fury, Don José stabs Carmen to death.

ARGUMENT OF OUR VERSION

Place of action: Barcelona, the Raval and the nearby mountains
Period: 1960s

ACT I

The Rambles of the city of Barcelona, between the Tabacs de Filipines factory and the police station of the civil guard.

Micaela is looking for Sergeant Don José, in the existing detachment in the square. Informed by Corporal Morales and his guards that Don José will come with the group to relieve them, she decides to return later to meet her countryman. He has barely left the square when he is relieved by a detachment led by Zúñiga, with whom Don José comes while there is a parade of children singing happily.

Don José is informed of Micaela's arrival and awaits the visit of the young woman who surely brings news of her mother, but Zúñiga asks him for details of other very different women. There, in the tobacco factory, isn't that where the fickle cigar workers known throughout the city work? José confirms this complacently, to the captain who is serving here for the first time. Then the factory bell rings for the break from work, and with the other cigar girls, Carmen comes out, the most beautiful and vivacious of them all, who is courted by so many men and who sings a popular gypsy love song, staring into Don José, the only one who doesn't worry about her, the only one on whom - today - he has set his sights. When the break at the factory is over and the other young women have returned to work, Carmen passes very close to the factory and throws a flower at the sergeant and disappears. José has stood up and observes the flower and follows the woman with his gaze. Micaela approaches, bringing him a letter, money and a kiss from her mother. Don José is happy, because one day Micaela will be his wife. He has not yet said goodbye to his childhood friend, a great commotion is heard coming from the factory.

The women rush to Captain Zúñiga explaining in broken screams that Carmen, in a fight, has drawn a knife and injured another worker, so Zúñiga sends José to the factory to arrest Carmen. While at the guard post, the captain writes the arrest warrant with which José will take Carmen to prison, she manages to win over the young sergeant with her arts of seduction, and he agrees to let her escape, when under his custody will be taken to prison, and so she promises to give him her love as a reward, so she meets him at night in the tavern of Lillas Pastia, near the Rambla, in the Raval. When Zúñiga comes with the arrest warrant, Don José drops the cigarette case according to the agreement. The sergeant is arrested for dereliction of duty.

ACT II

A tavern of the Raval, the one of Lillas Pastia.

Place frequented by Carmen and her straperlist companions. There is a lot of excitement and joy. Together with Frasquita and Mercedes, Carmen sings and dances for the audience, being informed by Captain Zúñiga that José has served his sentence and is free. Escamillo, brave and reckless bullfighter, makes his triumphant entrance into the tavern.

He is also one of Carmen's suitors, but she has only one word for him, as for Captain Zúñiga, "wait".

While the attendants are leaving, two straperlists, Dancaire and Remendado, enter, fleeing from the civil guard, to "negotiate" with Carmen, Mercedes and Frasquita about their "businesses". Together they distract the policemen so that they can free themselves from them and do the estraperlo without being arrested.

They are all connived, except Carmen, who initially doubts the terms of the "deal" and has doubts about Don José, who has released her from prison.

The cunning thieves have a good idea for Carmen to join their cause for good, to persuade Don José when he arrives at the tavern to defect and join their gang, since his knowledge will surely be a great ally in their smuggling expeditions.

Carmen will try, first making Don José swear her love, then dancing for him, then slyly holding him back when the retreat from the barracks sounds. José worries because Carmen questions his love when he wants to return to his obligations, Don José explains and confesses his passionate love to her again. In vain, as she urges him to stay with her or get away from her forever.

ACT III

In the mountains of Montjuïc or Collserola or anywhere on the way to the border.

Strappers and other emigrants have stopped for a short rest.

José must watch over the goods while the others find out if the road is clear. Carmen, who asks her luck at cards, hates Don José, the one she dreams of is the bullfighter Escamillo. Are the cards right when, no matter how you put them, they always herald death?

The smugglers continue their route: only José remains vigilant.

Micaela appears, sent by her mother to look for Don José to accompany her mother, who is terminally ill, home. Then, Escamillo, the famous bullfighter, arrives at the mountain of the smugglers, without warning, to visit his beloved, and without knowing that he has in front of him an angry Don José, he proudly narrates to him his adventure with the beautiful and unconscious woman

Only the reaction of the bullfighters on the mountain prevents a furious Don José from ending the life of the surprised bullfighter. Escamillo continues not to understand Don José's reaction and, before leaving, he invites Carmen and the straperlistes to their next bullfight in the Plaça de les Arenes de Ciutat Comtal. When they were all going to continue on their way, Micaela asked Don José to go with her to the town to see her dying mother. Carmen mockingly advises Don José to leave, that she wants nothing to do with him, and Don José, looking humiliated, curses her before going on his way with Micaela and swearing that they will return let's see the faces...

ACT IV

Bullring of Las Arenas

An immense crowd awaits "the paseillo" of the bullfighters. The gangs enter and the town enthusiastically cheers Escamillo, Carmen accompanies him to the ruedo. they will get married Now she loves the bullfighter and ignores the warnings of her friends and Don José's threats. But when they go to the square, where the fight has already begun, José cuts her off, asks her to make up her mind, pleads for her love for the last time, conjures her loyalty and reminds her of times gone by. In vain

Carmen has already made a decision: Be free or die. And while she throws at José's feet the ring that one day he had given her as proof of his love, José attacks her in desperation with the intention of killing her at the precise moment when the people cheer in the square, with enthusiasm, to the victorious Escamillo.

Don José, one more of those who believe that women are objects of their property, another of those who think they can kill her because she was theirs.

What will happen to Jose?

DIRECTOR'S NOTES

I killed her because she was mine. Chronicle of a crime of gender violence.

Bitter and sinister, devoid of anachronisms that could relegate it to the status of a costumer, our Carmen wants to be the chronicle of a homicide, of the violent murder of a woman.

Stolen from the imagery of Luís Buñuel, the "mise-en-scène" is nourished by the sour sherry of the "tablaos" of the Rambles and the fragrance of oranges and the sea that has the bitter aftertaste of absinthe from the brothels of Barcelona, port of contraband and slaves of a secular misery even more intense during the dictatorship of General Franco.

The dirtiest Barcelona of the 1960s is the labyrinth where a blonde-dyed prostitute, a bullfighter promoted to the category of God and a poor drunken and shrill civil guard invalid from war pass by.

A graduate in acting from the Institut del Teatre in Barcelona, he is a director and playwright; actor, adjuster and dubbing director; and director and scriptwriter for radio and television. He made his directorial debut in 1982 with Zoo Story, by Edward Albee, translated by Terenci Moix.

That same year he won the Adrià Gual National Award for the best directing project for La desaparecido de Wendy, by Josep M. Benet i Jornet, starring Martí Galindo and Loles León, a great success with the public and critics in Madrid and Barcelona. Unable to come up with any mercenary strategy that would make him prosper, he only directs when he feels intimately involved in the works that he is passionate about. Amor a medias, by Allan Aikbourn; El superviviente, by Manuel Vázquez Montalbán; La voz humano, by Jean Cocteau; Carpa Barcelona (which he directed under the obligation of Mario Gas for the Cultural Olympiad); Tirante lo Blanco; 1789, La Revolución, for Catalunya Ràdio, are some of his most personal productions. Lorca, which earned him a nomination for Best Visiting Director by the Association of Entertainment Critics of New York (ACE); after an acclaimed national tour and a brilliant season at the Teatro Español, the play is on an extensive international tour; it is worth highlighting the extraordinary reception in theatres in the United States and Mexico, where it opened the Cervantino Festival.

El llanto, another Lorca play performed in such emblematic theatres as The Carnival in Miami, La Barraca in Lisbon, Teatro Poliorama in Barcelona, or Teatro Español in Madrid where it had a brilliant season; unanimously acclaimed by the public and international critics, it has been a finalist for the Max Awards (2009 and 2010).

José Arias Velasco's La Vampira del Raval with music by Albert Guinovart, one of the most beloved shows by the Barcelona public, won five Butaca Awards and a Max for best musical composition. Curro el Palmo's Romance, conceived from Serrat's song; a portrait of immigrant charnega Barcelona is his most unusual show: premiered at the Grec Festival in Barcelona, with Nacho Blanco, Quiqui Morente and Antonio Canales, considered, among experts, one of the best flamenco musicals of all time, closes, for now, the Octubre Teatral journey. Founder of Ópera Popular de Barcelona, thanks to Cristina Raventós, he currently stages operas with total happiness.
